For a city that Graham Greene once described "as a town helping police with its enquiries", it's little surprise that Brighton has more pubs per capita than any other city in the UK.

But if you do like a beer beside the sea-side then there is one hostelry for which you should head. Perched on a quasi-roundabout, just a stone's throw from the station, the Evening Star is a beer drinker's paradise.

And the emphasis is firmly on drinking not décor - think wooden floors, utilitarian tables and church benches.

But the giddy selection of beer is second to none and it's easy to see why the Surrey and Sussex branch of the Campaign for Real Ale recently voted it its Regional Pub of the Year.

The pub proudly boasts 10 hand pumps, serving seven rotating real ales and three real ciders or perries, as well as a lip-smacking range of more than 35 imported bottled beers.

Best of all, however, are the beers from the co-owned Dark Star brewery in nearby Ansty. Highlights from this pioneering micro include the unashamedly hoppy Hophead bitter and the delicious local hero Dark Star.
